Volunteer as a member of the National Trust’s North Regional Advisory Board

What’s the role about?
As an influential volunteer on our Regional Advisory Board, you will be contributing to our work to protect and care for places so people and nature can thrive, ensuring everyone benefits. We’re looking for creative and strategic thinkers to join our Board in the North. You’ll shape the direction of the Trust by encouraging the things we’re getting right, and helping us to identify ways in which we can do better. It’s not about approval, but new perspectives, enhancing existing strategies and helping us think through the challenges and opportunities we face in delivering the big ambitions in our Regional Business Plan. And it’s about making a real, tangible difference to the places and communities you love. The places we look after are varied and for everyone – we’re keen to reflect this in our Advisory Board. This time round we’re looking for experts in key areas, particularly diversity and inclusion; sustainability and climate change; land management and farming; and people engagement, through education, learning and volunteering.

Where do you come in?
Sharing an affinity with our cause, you’ll have the deep experience, strategic thinking, and innovative approach that helps the Trust in the region – and potentially beyond. About you:

• You could be engaged in projects, networks and initiatives that complement the Trust’s cause, so you’ll understand what we’re trying to do and know how to make it happen.
• You don’t need to work in conservation – we’d like some brand new perspectives.
• You will have local knowledge and a desire to help make the region’s special places the best they can be, offering access and enjoyment for all.
• You will already understand the current economic, environmental and social trends that have an impact on the North.
• You want to make a real difference.
